

Communication DNA Report for: Chris Coddington

Your Primary Communication DNA Style is Information

However, it is supported by an important secondary communication style being Goal-Setting which is reflected below.

A person with a need for information likes to analyze and focus on the tangible.

Unique Communication Keys for Chris Coddington:

Your communication strength:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Good at providing specifics and details • Comfortable speaking directly and candidly
You like to be communicated with on the following terms:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Provide facts • Provide specifics • Provide options
You learn by:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Concrete examples and reading • Taking action and discussion
Your information requirement:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Provide research • Big picture
Conversation starter:	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • What is a new idea you have read about lately? • What has been a success for you recently?

Building Relationships

There are 4 Communication DNA Styles: Goal-Setting, Lifestyle, Stability and Information. Adaptive individuals are naturally flexible in relation to the 4 primary styles.

To learn more about each communication style and how to interact with them, visit <http://www.communicationdna.com>.

Sharing builds trust and relationships – send your Report to those you interact with.